O.W. Gurley

O.W. Gurley moved to Tulsa, Oklahoma in 1906. It was here where he purchased 40 acres of land and started selling plots to Black people only. Along with his own businesses and the businesses of people who purchased land the area began to thrive and became known as Greenwood, also Black Wall Street.

Black Wall Street

In the 1910s, in Tulsa, Oklahoma, the thriving Greenwood area built up and became known as Black wall street. Black doctors, lawyers, realtors, and other professionals all lived in and owned businesses in Greenwood.

Business Owner

A business owner has to work hard to ensure that he can make enough profit to earn a good living but also build their business. However the hard work can pay off if you build up something you are proud of and make a contribution with your business to your local community.

Group Economics

The most important thing in Group economics is that people work together to ensure the money stays in their group to better the financial situation of everyone. The Black community can benefit from group economics if we work together to ensure that we shop and do business with each other.
